The Health Minister warmly greeted the HfA team that arrived today from Geneva. The Beta government conveys its profound appreciation, especially given the challenges faced by HfA. The Minister stated, “Our nation genuinely relies on international support from esteemed NGOs like HfA to deliver healthcare to our people.”

The Geneva delegation highlighted their immediate goal of ensuring the safe release of their staff held in Beta Town, stating that, “Such incidents shouldn't occur. Our primary concern remains our team's safety.” They further elaborated on the mounting global pressure to shift medical aid to Gamma, necessitating discussions with the Beta government about transitioning their health activities. According to HfA, with the decreasing tension in Beta, it's deemed appropriate for humanitarian organizations to redirect their focus to areas with pressing needs, such as war-affected Gamma.

The Minister acknowledged the predicament of Health for All, adding, “It's disheartening to witness global humanitarian organizations depart, especially towards countries that already have substantial resources. Their departure will undeniably impact our citizens deeply. I cannot hide my fear that low-resource government like ours will not be able to fill this void.”

When queried about the possibility of governmental action for the staff's release in Beta Town, she responded, “The matter largely rests with tribal leaders. Any governmental interference might escalate tensions. Continuous dialogue with tribal heads seems the most prudent course.”
